U.S. trainers say the Afghan army and police — key to Obama's new war strategy — are far from ready to take over

By DIANNA CAHN

BAGHLAN PROVINCE, Afghanistan — Tomorrow, Afghanistan's homegrown soldiers might be ready to take over the fight against the Taliban, so that American forces can begin to come home as President Barack Obama hopes.

But today, they are far from ready. Even the best Afghan units lack training, discipline and adequate reinforcements. In one new unit in Baghlan province, Afghan soldiers cower in a ditch whenever shooting breaks out. Others routinely steal U.S.-supplied fuel, equipment and weapons. And a few are suspected of collaborating with the Taliban against the Americans.

"I do not feel I am a mentor here," said Capt. Jason Douthwaite, a logistics offi-

It's not, 'Let me teach you your job.' It's more like, 'How much did you steal from the American government today?'"

In his speech at West Point last week announcing a surge of 30,000 additional U.S. troops into Afghanistan, Obama said building and training the Afghan security forces would become a pillar of America's new war strategy so that U.S. forces could begin to be withdrawn in July 2011.

Obama's top commander in Afghanistan, Army Gen. Stanley McChrystal, said the goal is to double Afghan forces to 400,000, and to do so in four years.

But given the unbridled corruption that infests the ranks of the Afghan National Army and Afghan National Police, as well as a severe shortage of quality recruits and a gaping void in the Afghan leadership and command structure, many outside experts — and, increasingly, U.S. trainers on the ground — doubt that the Afghan forces will be able to stand on their own any time soon.

Japanese suspend talks on Futenma

By BLAINE HARDEN
The Washington Post

SEOUL — A rift between the United States and Japan over the future of a military air station on Okinawa widened Tuesday, as Foreign Minister Katsuya Okada told Japanese media that talks on relocating the base have been suspended.

The report offers additional evidence that the newly elected government of Japan is uncomfortable with the military footprint of the United States.

Japan may ask the United States to mitigate the military's impact on the daily life of Okinawans before reaching a conclusion on what to do about the disputed air station, chief Cabinet secretary Hirofumi Hirano said Tuesday.

"The biggest priority for the Japanese side is to reduce burdens on the people of Okinawa," he said at a news conference.

Asked whether the U.S. government could comment on the reported suspension of U.S.-Japan talks about the air base, a spokesman for the American Embassy in Tokyo said, "No."

In Washington, a spokesman told Stars and Stripes that the State Department had no comment on reports that Japan was suspending the talks.

"We believe the road map is still the best plan for reducing the burden on Okinawa while maintaining U.S. strategic interests," the spokesman added.

During his visit to Tokyo last month, President Barack Obama and Prime Minister Yukio Hatoyama set up a "high-level working group" to resolve the dispute about the location of the Marine Corps Air Station Futenma.

Five blasts rip through Baghdad

Attacks target government, leave 127 dead

BY BRIAN MURPHY
The Associated Press

BAGHDAD — A series of coordinated attacks struck Baghdad on Tuesday, including two suicide car bombers and another vehicle that blew up near government sites. At least 127 were killed and hundreds wounded in the worst wave of violence in the capital in more than a month, authorities said.

A total of five attacks, which also included a suicide car bomb on a police patrol, showed the ability of insurgents to strike high-profile targets in the heart of Baghdad and marked the third time since August that government buildings were targeted with multiple blasts that killed more than 100 people.

The bombings reinforced concerns about shortcomings in Iraqi security as U.S. forces plan their withdrawal, and parliament held an emergency session with many lawmakers demanding answers for apparent security lapses.

Iraq's military spokesman blamed the carnage on an alliance of al-Qaida in Iraq and members of Saddam Hussein's banned Baath Party.

The U.S. military has sent some troops and forensic equipment to assist the Iraqis in the aftermath, said Army Master Sgt. Nicholas Conner, a military spokesman.

The bombings marked the most serious spate of violence in Bagdad since twin car bombs on Oct. 25 struck outside government offices, killing at least 155. In August, suicide bombers hit the finance and foreign ministries, killing more than 100.

Iraqi officials blamed the August and October attacks on al-Qaida in Iraq and loyalists of the Baath Party.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for Tuesday's attacks, though al-Qaida in Iraq had said it was behind the last two massive bombings against government buildings in Baghdad in August and October.

But there are questions whether Iraq's leaders are trying to shift attention away from a possible resurgence of Sunni insurgents led by al-Qaida in Iraq. A rise in insurgent power could be a serious blow to the government's credibility before national elections.

In a joint statement, U.S. Ambassador to Iraq Christopher

Hill and Gen. Raymond Odierno, America's top commander in Iraq, called on Iraqis to unite against violence and pledged to assist the government "to bring to justice those individuals or groups responsible for such murder."

Again, Iraq's military spokesman, Maj. Gen. Qassim al-Mousawi, appeared Tuesday to spread the blame between Baath loyalists and al-Qaida-linked extremists.

"The same hands that implemented the August and October attacks have carried out today's terrorist attacks against innocent civilians," he told The Associated Press.

The targets were the latest assaults directed at Iraqi authorities: near a compound with the Labor Ministry building, a court complex near the Iraqi-protected Green Zone and near the new site of the Finance Ministry after its previous building was destroyed in major attacks in August.

Iraq sets parliament elections for March

BAGHDAD — An elections official says Iraq's presidential council has again postponed nationwide parliamentary elections, setting March 7 as the date for the vote.

The official says the council's Tuesday decision followed an agreement earlier in the day to hold the elections March 6.

Qassim al-Aboudi, a senior electoral commission official, said the council made the decision to give workers more time to organize the election.

Officials were forced to postpone the Jan. 16 elections after lawmakers spent months wrangling over a new law that provides guidelines for the landmark vote.

Failure to pass the new law would have likely thrown the political process into a tailspin.

Soldiers without stability

Trainers: 'I couldn't get them to shoot their weapons'

"You're always going to have this tension of quantity over quality," said Candace Rondeaux, a senior analyst with the International Crisis Group in Brussels. "The danger of moving too quickly is that you won't have the cohesiveness, the loyalty and even the infrastructure to support those soldiers and police fighting. But with the domestic pressure to wrap this up and get it done, it becomes easy to rush it."

Rondeaux predicted that properly training and equipping an Afghan security force of 400,000 will take at least another five years.

"There is no way to do it fast," said Andrew Krepinevich, president of the Center for Strategic and Budgetary Assessments in Washington, whose own time estimate runs to a decade. "You've got to keep providing advisers at the maneuver and staff levels and work with them every step of the way. Otherwise it's not going to work."

By all accounts, the Afghan National Army is a more mature and efficient security force than the Afghan National Police. The force is developing a reputation for facing down the rising insurgency, and NATO training commanders in Kabul say the infrastructure is now in place to build up weaker units in the coming years.

Yet the experience of U.S. forces mentoring Afghan soldiers in Baghlan province last month underlined just how relative that assessment is.

During a Taliban ambush, gunfire was coming at the Americans and their Afghan counterparts from three sides. But the Afghan National Army soldiers of the 209 Corps, 2nd Brigade, 3rd Kandak (battalion), fresh out of training in Kabul, were not ready for a fight.

So after returning initial fire, the Afghan soldiers simply lay in a ditch, refusing to budge.

"They don't have the basics, so they lay down," said Capt. Michael Bell, who is one of a team of U.S. and Hungarian mentors tasked with making this young kandak battle-ready. "I ran around for an hour trying to get them to shoot, getting fired on. I couldn't get them to shoot their weapons."

Bell, with the 1st Battalion, 148 Infantry Regiment of the Ohio National Guard, and another American soldier treated several superficial wounds — the Afghan soldiers didn't even have bandages, much less a medic — then finally persuaded most of their Afghan counterparts to get in their pickup trucks and push out.

The experience left the Americans rattled and exposed just how far NATO coalition forces still must go to ready the Afghan security forces to protect their own country.

Rushing to failure?

The Afghan army currently numbers about 97,000 soldiers, with a target of 134,000 by November 2010 and 240,000 by 2013. Meanwhile, the end goal for the 94,000-strong national police force is 160,000. Currently, an average of 2,500 new soldiers and 2,000 new police officers are recruited each month, but the monthly attrition rate is as high as 25 percent.

To increase the force, NATO is creating incentives, including a recent $45 raise for all police. Starting salary for a police officer is now $165 a month.

The pace of training is also expanding. Army training schools in the five regional commands will soon double student numbers and shorten the courses from 10 weeks to eight. Instructors are being prepared and massive building is under way to accommodate 1,400 new students this cycle, compared with 600 in previous ones, said NATO Brig. Simon Levey, commander of the Combined Training Advisory Group-Army in Kabul.

"We've built both infrastructure and training bases which are absolutely key and are just coming on line now," Levey said. "The Afghans are recruiting more vigorously. It's something we couldn't do before because the pipeline was not adequate."

But mentors at the ANA's Camp Kelagay, for example, say the Afghan corps commanders for their unit refuse to allot adequate training time, regularly sending Afghan army companies out on patrols and operations without a basic knowledge of fighting.

Maj. Jeffery Leslie, whose unit of 58 U.S. mentors and support staff is embedded with a Hungarian Operational Mentor and Liaison Team at Kelagay, wondered if unqualified recruits were being signed up in the push to build up the Afghan army so quickly.

"We suspect the ANA have bad guys in the ranks, whether they are known or unknown to anybody," Leslie said. "There are ANA units out there that are very capable. I think it's just too much too fast for the manpower of the country to sustain."

Leslie said 100 new recruits were sent to Kelagay to replace dozens of deserters, but many of them ran off, too.

'The guy you trusted yesterday could be the guy planting the IED'

By GEOFF ZIEZULEWICZ
Stars and Stripes

WARDAK PROVINCE, Afghanistan — The Afghan police chief asked why the Americans still had their armor on after entering his unit's compound during a recent visit.

Army 1st Lt. Julian Stewart didn't want to appear rude. Keeping things calm, he knew, is a key part of working with the Afghan National Police.

"He said it showed disrespect to him because we didn't trust his police officers," said Stewart, part of a police mentoring team from the Georgia National Guard's Company A, 2nd Battalion, 121st Infantry Regiment, which was working in the rural Kabul province. "We decided to take our gear off."

Soon afterward, an Afghan policeman opened fire on the Americans, spraying the area with what Stewart estimated to be between 40 to 50 rounds. One U.S. soldier was wounded.

The Americans returned fire during the Sept. 12 incident, dropping the policeman.

"He kept repeating in Dari, 'I did this for my prophet,'" Stewart said. "The whole time we're doing this, the ANP are doing nothing."

The United States is counting on an expanded Afghan National Police force to shoulder increasing responsibility for securing the nation against Taliban and al-Qaida insurgents, and accelerated training for Afghan soldiers and police is a key part of President Barack Obama's expanded Afghanistan mission.

First, however, American soldiers have to figure out how to trust their Afghan counterparts, riven by corruption, illiteracy and Taliban infiltration.

"The guy you trusted yesterday," said Sgt. 1st Class Joseph Myers, who lives alongside Afghan police forces at Combat Outpost Apache, "could be the guy planting the IED in the road today."

No one knows for certain how often Afghan forces have attacked NATO troops. While it logs friendly-fire incidents within its own ranks, NATO's International Security Assistance Force says it does not track incidents of Afghan forces attacking their ISAF counterparts.

But there have been deadly incidents. In November, an Afghan policeman killed five British soldiers in Helmand province. The killer fled and has not been caught.

U.S. Army Sgt. Aaron Smith and

Pfc. Brandon Owens were killed Oct. 2 in Wardak province by a policeman who is said to have been mentally unstable before he was approached and paid off by the Taliban. He, too, remains at large.

A joint U.S. Army-Afghan police investigation into the deaths of Owens and Smith continues, according to Lt. Col. Kimo Gallahue, who commands Smith's unit, the 2nd Battalion, 87th Infantry Regiment.

NATO Training Mission-Afghanistan spokesman Army Lt. Col. David Hylton said in an e-mail to Stars and Stripes that a joint investigation is also being conducted into last month's Helmand shooting.

Regardless of the attacks, NATO troops have no choice but to continue working with the Afghan forces.

"I think they are hitting the bottom of the barrel and pulling in guys who just don't want to be here," he said.

Raiding the cookie jar

At Kelagay, the growing pains of a young force are apparent.

After a series of problems, the corps changed out the kandak commander and his executive officer in October for a commander who had run a top-rated Afghan army command before. Mentors say it's a big improvement but you can't change an entire battalion by changing one man.

The mentors report missing vehicles, weapons and other military equipment, and outright theft of fuel provided by the U.S. Then there are the AWOL rates — up to 60 percent, far higher than the average for the Afghan army — and death threats leveled against two different U.S. officers who tried to stop the Afghan soldiers from stealing.

"This kandak would not be ready in five years," said mentor Sgt. 1st Class Sam Livingston, 35, a guardsman from Cleveland. "I see so much waste and corruption. Even though it's on a small scale, it's an indication of what's going on. Everyone has their hand in the cookie jar."

Discouraged, he added: "At some point, you begin to question, 'How much good am I personally doing here?'"

Douthwaite, the logistics officer, said he was threatened twice after he began trying to control the steady pilfering of U.S.-supplied fuel.

"It's a corrupt system all the way from the corps level on down," he said.

That's not to say that there are no successes. At the squad level, Staff Sgt. Eric Schabell, an Ohio National Guardsman from Independence, Ky., and a former flight instructor, said he's happy with small achievements, like teaching the Afghan soldiers how to zero a weapon — a first step in aligning its sights.

"I've been pleasantly surprised several times by what they already know," Schabell said. "The [executive officer] and platoon leaders tell me they want their soldiers to be trained. They are happy we are here. They understand the soldiers don't know their jobs. And I see that they care, and I think that keeps me from getting frustrated."

Trust, but verify

The death threats and recent attacks by Afghan forces on U.S. and NATO soldiers make for an uneasy relationship.

In March, an Afghan soldier guarding the tower at Camp Shaheen shot three U.S. soldiers, killing two.

In Wardak province, soldiers from Company A, 2nd Battalion, 87th Infantry Regiment say they've come across more than 70 bombs since they arrived in the hostile Tangi Valley last summer.

Two soldiers have been killed and dozens wounded. But their Afghan army partners have never been hit.

"The cold hard facts are that in the Tangi Valley, the ANA have not been attacked," said Staff Sgt. Jim Putman of Company A's intelligence support team. "Yet here we sit, we've had [70]- something IED incidents since July. One would have to assume they're dirty or paying off the Taliban."

The Afghan soldiers frequently find improvised explosive devices and snip the command wires instead of marking them and waiting for U.S. forces to come detonate them. The Americans say this just allows the insurgents to return and reconnect them.

Capt. Hayhatullah Adil, the Afghan company commander in the Tangi Valley, said his soldiers don't get hit because they are good at looking for bombs and command wires. Plus, he said, there is a higher Taliban bounty for blowing up U.S. troops, and the villagers know there will be trouble if his soldiers are blown up.

"I will light up the whole village," Adil said.

Despite the concerns, Marine Staff Sgt. Benjamin Ricard, part of a training team working with the Afghan army, defended the Afghan soldiers last month.

"I walk in front of them, I walk behind them and they all got loaded weapons," he said. "I don't question it at all."

On Nov. 13, Ricard and another Marine were severely injured when a bomb went off under their Mine Resistant Ambush Protected vehicle. Army Spc. Christopher J. Coffland and a 20-year-old interpreter were killed. U.S. soldiers said they were leading Afghan soldiers to a recently discovered bomb site.

"I have no choice," Ricard said days before the blast. "It's my job to trust them."

"There's no getting around the fact that it has an effect," Gallahue said. "But we have to overcome it. The beginning of the future of Afghanistan is a security force that can protect its own citizens."

Sick of 'doing his job'

A faint scent of hashish greeted 118th Military Police Company soldiers last month as they entered an Afghan police compound in Wardak province's Jalrez Valley.

Soon, Army Sgt. Joshua Watkins was talking business with Maj. Abdullah Kareem, who was put in charge of the valley's police force a few months ago.

Watkins asked for a definitive head count of corporals, sergeants and officers.

Kareem didn't have the numbers and went on to tell him that the numerous policemen claiming to be deputy commanders were doing so simply to get things from the Americans.

"That's [expletive] up," Watkins said, and business turned a little more serious.

Kareem laughed.

"He's good at talking, but he can't force anything," Kareem said of Watkins. "You are responsible for [Combat Outpost] Apache; I am responsible for this valley."

"I am responsible for him because he's too lazy," Watkins said dryly to his interpreter, eliciting nervous laughter in the room as it was translated. "I am tired of doing his job."

It was another tense exchange between two would-be partners, with much left unspoken.

Watkins later emphasized the patience required to work with the local police, but other soldiers say the culture of corruption in Afghanistan and unprofessionalism of its police make trusting them that much harder.

In addition to abusing their power, the Afghan police are often seen by the public as lazy and remiss in their duties, according to a report released last summer by London's Royal United Services Institute and the Foreign Policy Research Institute.

Those problems are exacerbated by widespread drug abuse, according to the report. British officials estimate, for example, that 60 percent of the Afghan police officers in Helmand province use drugs.

"The ANP as a collective is riddled with problems starting with illiteracy, levels of which are currently estimated at 65 percent of the population," the report states. "This fundamental problem restricts the quality of recruits, the effectiveness of police training, and even their ability to write reports and record critical information."

In Logar province's Charkh district, a volatile area south of Kabul, Afghan police officers rarely leave the tiny base they share with American and Afghan soldiers. They never patrol, and they go out only to get food and other items from the nearby bazaar, said Capt. Jason Wingert, commander of Company B, 1st Battalion, 32nd Infantry Regiment.

Gallahue called the Afghan police "grossly undermanned and grossly underpaid."

There are approximately 700 policemen in Wardak province, Gallahue said. Though the Interior Ministry recently raised the monthly payments for all policemen, with the starting salary at $165 a month, the cost of living here is about $430 a month, meaning police with money problems are more susceptible to bribes and payoffs for placing bombs or tipping off insurgents when a U.S. convoy is set to roll out.

Yet the Afghan Ministry of the Interior has no mechanism to fight corruption and no effective internal affairs division, Gallahue said, as well as no transparency or accountability.

McChrystal downplays Afghan timetable

By LEO SHANE III
Stars and Stripes

WASHINGTON — The head of U.S. military forces in Afghanistan downplayed the president's July 2011 goal to begin withdrawing troops and said he wouldn't rule out delaying that timeline or even adding more troops to the new 100,000 end strength planned for the country.

"I don't view July 2011 as a deadline," Army Gen. Stanley McChrystal said in testimony Tuesday before members of the House Armed Services Committee. "At that time, we'll evaluate the time and scope of a possible drawdown," a decision he called the "natural evolution" of the military mission.

Both McChrystal, who also leads the NATO mission in Afghanistan, and Karl Eikenberry, leader of U.S. civilian efforts there, told lawmakers they support President Barack Obama's plan to send about 30,000 more troops into the country to push back the resurgent Taliban and to speed up the training for the fledgling Afghan security forces.

But lawmakers remained divided, with several Democrats skeptical that more troops can solve political corruption there and Republicans convinced the summer 2011 drawdown represents an abandoning of the mission.

"If as a nation we are saying that this is a war of necessity, how can we say we'll withdraw troops in 18 months even if the mission isn't complete?" said Rep. Randy Forbes, R-Va.

Last week in an address to the nation, Obama billed the summer 2011 mark as a way to pressure the Afghan government into assuming more responsibility for security, while still promising long-term assistance in stabilizing the region.

McChrystal said he did not recommend the July 2011 withdrawal date, but he's confident both the American and Afghan public will see significant military progress before then.

He also said that the goal will not allow Taliban and al-Qaida leaders to lie in wait for U.S. forces to leave.

"If they wait, we'll build up a better way of life for the Afghan population," he said. "In addition, the Afghan security force will continue to build up, leaving them much less vulnerable to future attacks."

However, McChrystal said he would not allow political considerations to influence his evaluation of progress over the next 18 months, and if additional forces are needed because of an increase in violence "then of course I would request it."

Those comments drew criticism from Democrats who said insurgent havens in Pakistan and continued failings of President Hamid Karzai's government mean no increase in foreign troops can fix the situation.

"We've seen greater numbers of American casualties ... but no improvement in the security situation," said Rep. Chellie Pingree, D-Maine. "In my opinion, we've reached a security plateau."

Karzai: Afghan army ready in five years

The Associated Press

KABUL — After meeting Tuesday with U.S. Defense Secretary Robert Gates, Afghan President Hamid Karzai said it may be five years before his army is ready to take on insurgents — a blunt warning that the planned exit strategy for U.S. troops from Afghanistan 18 months from now could grind slowly through 2014.

Karzai also said it will be at least 15 years before his government can bankroll a security force strong enough to protect the country from the threat of insurgency. Karzai's statements, along with Gates' agreement that the U.S. drawdown starting in July 2011 would be "a several-year process," appeared to firm up growing evidence that President Barack Obama's proposed troop pullout would be a slow-motion reverse of the rapid escalation of 30,000 troops carried out over the next six months.

"Whether it's three years or two years or four years remains to be seen," the defense secretary said. "But as President Obama has made clear, this is not an open-ended commitment on the part of the United States."

Gates also addressed a fear among the Afghan people that more troops in their country will result in more violence and civilian casualties.

"Our top priority remains the safety of civilians," he said.

Just before the two leaders spoke, the Afghan government accused NATO forces of killing civilians during a pre-dawn strike Tuesday in eastern Afghanistan.

NATO said seven militants were killed, but no civilians were injured or killed. A spokesman for the Afghan Interior Ministry said some civilians died in the attack aimed at a Taliban operative in Laghman province. Provincial

First stop-loss checks out Dec. 16, DOD says

By JEFF SCHOGOL
Stars and Stripes

ARLINGTON, Va. — After weeks of uncertainty, the Defense Finance and Accounting Service will start issuing retroactive stop-loss payments on Dec. 16, officials said.

But most people who have applied for the money should not expect to get paid by Christmas.

The Army estimates about 120,000 people are eligible for $500 for every month they were held beyond their initial end of service between September 2001 and September 2008.

Initially, the Army only sent 284 applications to DFAS for payment, expecting to send thousands more after the first ones were paid.

Now the Army will send bundles of applications to DFAS every week, with DFAS expected to have about 1,000 applications by Wednesday, said Army spokeswoman Jill Mueller.

"As many as we have done, we will send," Mueller said in an e-mail Monday.

DFAS needs 20 working days to process each bundle, officials said.

Each of the services has been accepting applications for retroactive stop-loss compensation since Oct. 21, but funding for the program was not available until Nov. 19.

The first Air Force payments went out Nov. 25.

Many people have complained that they have had problems applying for Army retroactive stop-loss pay, including being told their Social Security numbers aren't on the master list of soldiers who were stop-lossed, or that the Army doesn't agree with the length of time they claim they were held under stop-loss.

Wilson Ortiz Torres tried to retire from the Army in 2003, but he was held under stop-loss until 2005.

He received an e-mail from the Army saying his Social Security number wasn't on the master list, despite the fact that he submitted his request to retire and his DD-214 form, which shows when he was discharged.

On Tuesday, he got an e-mail from the Army saying his claim will be processed "by a case manager in the order it was received," but it offered no time line.

Now he's wondering what the next step is, and whether there will be another problem.

"It's going to go on and on until they finally say it's complete now," he said.

Report: Army using loophole to hire retired generals for contractor jobs

Stars and Stripes

The Army made use of a loophole in federal ethics law to hire two recently retired four-star generals for high-paying contract positions, USA Today reported Tuesday, citing public records and interviews.

The service's senior mentor program is run through defense contractor Northrop Grumman, but ethics law states that newly retired senior employees cannot be hired within a year of separating from a federal agency. However, instead of working through Northrop Grumman, the Army contracted individually with two former generals, John Vines and Dan McNeill, to advise commanders as part of its senior mentor program, the paper reported.

It paid McNeill $281,625 from December 2008 through August 2009, federal records show.

In mid-2007, records show, the Army awarded three contracts worth $226,285 to Vines.

The paper pointed out that the "cooling-off" period is meant to prevent "acts by former government employees which may reasonably give the appearance of making unfair use of prior government employment," according to ethics regulations.

"The cooling-off period doesn't seem to make a lot of sense when we have soldiers' lives at stake," Vines, who had retired in January 2007, told USA Today.

Army spokesman Gary Tallman said the arrangements were perfectly legal and "do not create any ... clever loopholes."

"This flagrantly violates the spirit of the revolving-door rules," said Danielle Bryan, executive director of the Project on Government Oversight. "What the Army did instead is create a new door so they could walk right through."

A USA Today investigation found that more and more retired officers are collecting six-figure pensions and adding to that income with high-paying defense contractor jobs as well as earning hundreds of dollars per hour as advisers to the military services.

Futenma: Japan sends mixed signals

The group's meetings were inconclusive and have been suspended, with no resumption set, Okada said at a news conference, according to the Kyodo news agency. "We are now waiting to see whether we should hold the discussions again," said Okada, who is a member of the working group, as is U.S. Ambassador John Roos.

After the group's last meeting, on Friday, U.S. officials had said that they expected there would be more negotiating sessions.

Japan and the United States agreed in 2006, as part of a $26 billion plan to move U.S. troops off and around Okinawa, that the Futenma air station would be moved to a new site on the island.

But Hatoyama, who was elected in August on a promise that he would be more assertive than previous Japanese leaders in dealing with the United States, has said he wants the air station moved off Okinawa altogether — possibly out of the country.

In recent weeks, mixed signals from his government about the future of the air station have frustrated the Obama administration. Obama said that the working group the two created would merely "implement" the existing agreement from 2006, but Hatoyama later said that unless the working group had the power to renegotiate the agreement, its meetings were pointless.

Since then, a number of the prime minister's statements on the base issue have been confusing or contradictory. He said last week that the issue need not be decided soon, then he said perhaps the air station should move to Guam and then he said the issue should be decided soon.

Hatoyama's approval ratings dipped below 60 percent in a newspaper poll released this week, as many of those polled criticized the prime minister for indecision on the base issue.

Futenma is located in a densely populated part of Okinawa and has become a symbol of the noise, pollution and crime that many Japanese associate with the U.S. military presence.

New contingency command tested at annual exercise

BY CHARLIE REED
Stars and Stripes

From a North Korean missile attack to a natural disaster, American and Japanese forces are preparing for the worst this week during their annual exercise in northern Japan dubbed Yama Sakura, or Mountain Cherry Blossom.

The exercise in Hokkaido, which wraps up Monday, brings together about 1,500 U.S. and 3,500 Japanese troops. It will be the first test of the U.S. Army's newest contingency command in the Far East, I Corps Forward, based at Camp Zama.

With about 90 soldiers, the small unit is charged with establishing the command and control headquarters for combat or humanitarian operations in Japan.

"The most difficult aspect is getting there and getting established when crisis occurs," U.S. Army Japan Commander Maj. Gen. Francis Wiercinski, who also commands I Corps Forward, said Saturday before the exercise kicked off. "But with I Corps Forward that's already done."

I Corps Forward is "perfectly designed" for peacekeeping and humanitarian aid and disaster relief scenarios but would need augmenting for combat operations, Wiercinski said.

Still, the unit can command troops from the other services — known as being "joint task force" capable — and could also deploy elsewhere in the region during an emergency, he said.

"Anybody could plug into us and have immediate situational awareness. Our footprint is small so we can move quickly."

However, I Corps Forward and Yama Sakura primarily are focused on coordinating with Japan's Ground Self-Defense Force and its newly established contingency readiness force, said Lt. Gen. Benjamin Mixon, U.S. Army Pacific commander.

For the first time, U.S. and Japanese forces will share an operations center during Yama Sakura and will test a new joint computer platform that improves information sharing, he said.

Among the war-game scenarios that will play out is a North Korean missile attack, which would trigger the U.S.-Japan missile defense shield — an air, ground and sea-based system. Army operations in such a situation, which the Air Force would command, include positioning Patriot missiles stationed in Japan to defend key civilian and military centers, Mixon said.

"It's well known, the ballistic missile threat that exists in the region."

Russian fire chief fired over deadly club blaze

MOSCOW — The fire chief of a Russian city where a nightclub blaze killed 118 revelers was fired Tuesday and authorities said fire records for the club appear to have been falsified.

President Dmitry Medvedev and Prime Minister Vladimir Putin urged a broad review of fire regulations, demanding tougher enforcement and lambasting officials and businessmen for their irresponsibility.

Romanian opposition calls for new vote

BUCHAREST, Romania — The loser in Romania's presidential election called on Tuesday for new elections, claiming he won the race.

Ex-Foreign Minister Mircea Geoana, who narrowly lost Sunday's presidential runoff to incumbent President Traian Basescu, said the elections had been fraudulent.

"In just a few hours an infernal vote-changing machine changed the votes and changed the will of the people," Geoana said. "I won the presidential elections."

Geoana said the party had officially contested the result of Sunday's vote at the Constitutional Court. The court will rule in a few days, and Basescu cannot take office until the ruling had been made.

Amnesty urges quick end to martial law

MANILA, Philippines — Amnesty International called on the Philippine government Tuesday to end martial law soon in a southern province, where troops cracked down on a powerful clan and its armed supporters blamed for the massacre of 57 people.

President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo last week declared military rule in Maguindanao province, allowing government forces to arrest members of the Ampatuan clan without court warrants and order some 2,400 loyalists to surrender their weapons.

Air force helicopters dropped thousands of leaflets Tuesday urging the Ampatuan clan followers to surrender and give up their firearms. Two OV-10 bomber planes zoomed across Maguindanao to remind the outlaws what they face if they don't surrender, army Col. Leo Ferrer said.

U.N.: Heat continued to build in '09

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
The Associated Press

COPENHAGEN—This decade is on track to become the warmest since records began in 1850, and 2009 could rank among the top-five warmest years, the U.N. weather agency reported Tuesday on the second day of a pivotal 192-nation climate conference.

Only the United States and Canada experienced cooler conditions than average, the World Meteorological Organization said, although Alaska had the second-warmest July on record.

In central Africa and southern Asia, this will probably be the warmest year, but overall, 2009 will "be about the fifth-warmest year on record," said Michel Jarraud, secretary-general of the WMO.

The decade — from 2000 to 2009 — "is very likely to be the warmest on record, warmer than the 1990s, than the 1980s and so on," Jarraud told a news conference, holding a chart with a temperature curve pointing upward.

The decade has been marked by dramatic effects of warming.

In 2007-09, the summer melt reduced the Arctic Ocean ice cap to its smallest extent ever recorded. In the 2007-09 International Polar Year, researchers found that Antarctica is warming more than previously believed. Almost all glaciers worldwide are retreating.

Meanwhile, such destructive species as jellyfish and bark-eating beetles are moving northward out of normal ranges, and seas expanding from warmth and glacier melt are encroaching on low-lying island states.

Negotiators at the two-week talks in Copenhagen turned Tuesday to "metrics," "gas inventories" and other dense technicalities, as delegates worked to craft a global deal to rein in carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases and stem climate change.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency said scientific evidence clearly shows that greenhouse gases "threaten the public health and welfare of the American people" and that the pollutants — mainly carbon dioxide from burning fossil fuels — should be reduced, if not by Congress then by the agency responsible for enforcing air pollution.

The announcement gave President Barack Obama a new card in what is expected to be tough bargaining next week at the climate conference.

The U.S. has offered a 17 percent reduction in emissions from their 2005 level — comparable to a 3 to 4 percent cut from 1990 levels.

Swedish negotiator Anders Turesson on Tuesday said the U.S.' 17 percent reductions "are insufficient and we hope more would come out of that."

Envoy begins talks with North Korea

By JAE-SOON CHANG
The Associated Press

SEOUL — President Barack Obama's envoy began a rare trip to North Korea on Tuesday for the highest-level talks with the communist country in more than a year. A senior U.S. official warned of strong sanctions against Pyongyang unless it rejoins international nuclear talks.

Envoy Stephen Bosworth's mission is to find out whether North Korea will return to the stalled international talks on ending its nuclear programs after carrying out an atomic test blast in May and quitting the six-nation negotiations.

Bosworth's delegation flew to Pyongyang from Osan Air Base near Seoul, the U.S. Embassy in Seoul said.

North Korea's official Korean Central News Agency later said in a one-sentence dispatch that the delegation arrived in Pyongyang.

Footage from broadcaster APTN in Pyongyang showed Bosworth and Washington's lead nuclear negotiator, Sung Kim, arriving at an airport in Pyongyang, shaking hands with North Korean officials and posing for photos.

In Washington, a senior U.S. official said Bosworth had no new incentives for the North.

"We don't intend to reward North Korea simply for going back to doing something that it had previously committed to do," the official told reporters, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"There are no inducements or incentives other than the fact that should they resume the talks, then they would be in a position to pursue some of the things that were possible should they proceed with denuclearization."

The official noted that there have been suggestions and indications that Pyongyang may be ready to rejoin the talks involving China, Japan, the two Koreas, the U.S. and Russia.

But he added, "You never know what the answer is until you ask and get the question answered."

The official warned that the North faces strong U.N. sanctions if it does not agree to return to negotiations.

"At a minimum, I think it will reinforce the intention of the international community to continue a very strong enforcement" of U.N. sanctions resolutions adopted to punish the North for its nuclear test and other provocations, the official said.

U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton told reporters Monday that she hopes Bosworth is successful in persuading the North Koreans to return to the nuclear talks, and that the North will work for "a new set of relationships with us and with our partners."

This week's talks — the first direct U.S.-North Korean talks since Obama took office in January — come after a year of threatening rhetoric and rising tensions on the Korean peninsula.

Earlier this year, Pyongyang expelled U.N. nuclear inspectors, restarted its atomic facilities, test-fired a long-range rocket and a series of ballistic missiles, quit six-party talks and conducted the nuclear test.

Obama outlines initiatives for job growth

Focus on infrastructure projects, tax breaks for businesses

By PHILIP ELLIOTT
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama outlined major new government stimulus and jobs proposals on Tuesday, saying the nation must continue to “spend our way out of this recession.”

Without giving a price tag, Obama proposed a package of new spending for highway, bridge and other infrastructure projects, deeper tax breaks for small businesses and tax incentives to encourage people to make their homes more energy efficient.

“We avoided the depression many feared,” Obama said in a speech at the Brookings Institution, a Washington think tank. But, he added, “Our work is far from done.”

For the third time in a week, Obama sought to focus on job creation, noting that the jobless rate continues in double digits and that “a staggering” 7 million Americans have lost jobs since the recession began in December 2007.

While his proposal did not include the kind of direct federal public works jobs that were created in the 1930s, he said government could set the stage for more job creation by private businesses.

Obama did not characterize his proposals as another stimulus program, like the $787 billion version passed earlier this year, but Republican critics have called it just that and have said it will increase a federal deficit that is already at a record level.

Obama included sharp criticism for Republicans in his speech, accusing them of opposing economic stimulus efforts and his health care overhaul while supporting tax cuts and spending that have ballooned the deficit.

He said that soon after taking office, he and congressional Democrats took “a series of difficult steps” to try to stabilize the financial system and pull the economy out of a deep recession.

“And we were forced to take those steps largely without the help of an opposition party which, unfortunately, after having presided over the decision-making that led to the crisis, decided to hand it to others to solve.”

Obama did not say how much his proposals would cost, although congressional Democrats are eyeing a $70 billion package to help create jobs and to provide aid to hard-pressed state and local governments. Administration aides suggested that the part of the package dealing with roads, bridges and other infrastructure could total about $50 billion.

While acknowledging increasing concerns in Congress and among the public over the nation’s growing debt, Obama said critics present a “false choice” between paying down deficits and investing in job creation and economic growth.

To pay for the new programs, the administration is citing the Treasury Department’s report on Monday that it expects to get back $200 billion in taxpayer-approved bank bailout funds faster than expected.

Obama suggested this windfall would both help the government spend money on job creation while also paying down the nation’s $12 trillion debt.

EPA says greenhouse gases bad for health

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Obama administration took a major step Monday toward imposing the first federal limits on climate-changing pollution from cars, power plants and factories, declaring there was compelling scientific evidence that global warming from man-made greenhouse gases endangers Americans’ health.

The announcement by the Environmental Protection Agency was clearly timed to build momentum toward an agreement at the international conference on climate change that opened Monday in Copenhagen. It signaled the administration was prepared to push ahead for significant controls in the U.S. if Congress doesn’t act first.

The price could be steep for both industry and consumers. The EPA finding clears the way for rules that eventually could force the sale of more fuel-efficient vehicles and require plants to install costly new equipment — at a cost of billions or even many tens of billions of dollars — or shift to other forms of energy.

No analysis has been conducted by the EPA on costs of such broad regulations, although the agency put the price tag of its proposed climate-related car rules at $60 billion, with an estimated benefit of $250 billion.

Energy prices for many Americans probably would rise, too — though Monday’s finding will have no immediate impact since regulations have yet to be written. Supporters of separate legislation in Congress argue they could craft measures that would mitigate some of those costs.

Environmentalists hailed the EPA announcement as a clear indication the United States will take steps to attack climate change even if Congress fails to act. And they welcomed the timing of the declaration, saying it will help the Obama administration convince delegates at the international climate talks that the U.S. is serious about addressing the problem. Obama will address the conference next week.

But business groups said regulating carbon emissions through the EPA under existing clean air law would put new economic burdens on manufacturers, cost jobs and drive up energy prices.

“It will choke off growth by adding new mandates to virtually every major construction and renovation project,” declared Thomas Donohue, president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

EPA administrator Lisa Jackson said Monday, “There are no more excuses for delaying,” adding that the so-called endangerment analysis from global warming had been under consideration at the agency for three years. After the official finding, she said the agency is now “obligated to make reasonable efforts to reduce greenhouse pollutants under the Clean Air Act.”

Weezer cancels tour

Weezer has canceled the rest of its December tour after the lead singer was injured in a bus crash in New York. Rivers Cuomo and band assistant Sarah Kim suffered minor injuries when the group's tour bus skidded on ice, struck a guide rail and slid into a ditch Sunday morning. Cuomo and Kim were hospitalized after the accident in the upstate New York town of Glen. That's about 40 miles west of Albany. They were traveling to a show in Boston. Cuomo's condition isn't clear. A message on the band's Web site says Weezer is canceling the rest of its Ratitude tour and will try to reschedule those dates.

cooked and ate a rat during filming.

Chef Gino D'Acampo and actor Stuart Manning have been charged with animal cruelty after preparing and eating rat risotto on the wilderness show "I'm a Celebrity ... Get Me Out of Here" last month.

They were charged after complaints by animal welfare activists in Australia, where the show is filmed. The maximum penalty is three years in prison.

ITV said Monday that producers had sought health and safety advice about eating the rat but had failed to check whether killing it was legal.

The broadcaster said it apologized, "and will put in place procedures for next year's series to ensure that this cannot happen again."

The Colombian pop singer joined a diverse group of luminaries when she addressed the Oxford Union on Monday. Afterwards, she was photographed in the library. The 32-year-old, who is also a UNICEF ambassador, used her speech to hundreds of Oxford students to stress her belief in education for all. Many students had waited in the rain for the pop star's appearance at the university's famous debating society. "I was born in Colombia, growing up in the developing world where education is perceived as a luxury and not as a birthright," she said.

The pop star runs a charity that builds schools for poor children in Colombia. Shakira said her singing career has helped her campaign.

"I think those two paths have been so parallel in my life," she said. "My career gives me an enormous opportunity to communicate issues that I believe strongly should be communicated."

Alexa Ray Joel staying with dad after pill scare

A publicist says the daughter of Billy Joel and Christie Brinkley is staying with her father two days after being treated in New York for a possible overdose of pills.

Alexa Ray Joel's publicist Claire Mercuri won't say where the 23-year-old is staying. Billy Joel has homes in Manhattan and on eastern Long Island. His daughter was hospitalized for several hours Saturday after police received a 911 call saying she had taken several pills.

Police say it is not clear whether she accidentally overdosed or attempted suicide.

Billboard names Powter one-hit wonder of decade

As far as one-hit wonders go, Daniel Powter is king of them all — for this decade, at least.

Powter, whose hit "Bad Day" reigned on top of the Billboard pop charts for five weeks in 2006, was named as the decade's top one-hit wonder by Billboard.

The magazine describes one-hit wonders as acts whose second hit did not reach the top 25; they only included acts from 2000 to 2007, since someone from last year might just be taking a break.

No. 2 on their list is the Terror Squad for "Lean Back"; No. 3 is Crazy Town with "Butterfly"; No. 4 is MIMS with "This Is Why I'm Hot"; and No. 5 is D4L — remember them? — with "Laffy Taffy."

an automated dilemma

Scientists, lawyers mull the rules of a robotic world

By BROOKE DONALD
The Associated Press

Eric Horvitz illustrates the potential dilemmas of living with robots by telling the story of how he once got stuck in an elevator at Stanford Hospital with a droid the size of a washing machine. "I remembered thinking, 'Whoa, this is scary,' as it whirled around, almost knocking me out," the Microsoft researcher recalled. "Then, I thought, 'What if I were a patient?' There could be big issues here."

We're still far from the sci-fi dream of having robots whirring about and catering to our every need. But little by little, we'll be sharing more of our space with robots in the next decade, as prices drop and new technology creates specialized machines that clean up spilled milk or even provide comfort for an elderly parent.

Now scientists and legal scholars are exploring the likely effects. What happens if a robot crushes your foot, chases your cat off a ledge or smacks your baby? While experts don't expect a band of Terminators to attack or a "2001: A Space Odyssey" computer that takes control, even simpler, benign robots will have legal, social and ethical consequences.

"As we rely more and more on automated systems, we have to think of the implications. It is part of being a responsible scientist," Horvitz said.

Horvitz assembled a team of scientists this year when he was president of the Association for the Advancement of Artificial Intelligence and asked them to explore the future of human-robot interactions. A report on their discussions is due next year.

For years, robots have been used outside the home. They detect bombs on the battleground, build cars in factories and deliver supplies and visit patients in hospitals.

But the past few years have seen the rise of home robots. Mainly they are used for tasks like vacuuming (think Roomba). There are also robotic lawn mowers, duct cleaners, surveillance systems and alarm clocks. There are robotic toys for entertainment, such as Furby. Robotic companions, like Paro the harbor seal, to comfort the elderly. By 2015, personal robot sales in the U.S. will exceed $5 billion, more than quadrupling what they are now, according to ABI Research, which analyzes technology trends.

"You won't see Rosie from 'The Jetsons,' but you're going to see more and more robots that help

"It's not just making a system that assists someone. It's making a system that interacts with someone in a way that respects their dignity."

Above: Eric Horvitz, former president of the Association for the Advancement of Artificial Intelligence, commissioned a report on the relationship between people and artificial intelligence due out next year. Left: Ryan Calo, with Stanford Law School, stands with a medical applications robot in Palo Alto, Calif.

School that the original manufacturer might not always be liable if a robot went haywire.

"Robots are not just things the manufacturer builds and you go out and use them in a specific way. Robots can often be instructed, they can be programmed, you can have software that is built upon by others," he said.

There are no laws in the U.S. specifically governing robots, and discussion of them usually leads to science fiction writer Isaac Asimov's Three Laws of Robotics, which debuted in his 1942 short story "Runaround."

The first of Asimov's laws is that robots should do no harm to a person. It's also one of the biggest considerations when manufacturing the next generation of personal robots.

"If a robot becomes increasingly autonomous and can make its own decisions, what happens if the robot does not carry out the exact wishes of the person?" said George Bekey, a robotics researcher and professor emeritus at University of Southern California.

As robots interact more closely with people, the bonds some people form with the machines — even ones that do not look like humans — might need to be considered.

Shoppers personalize their Roombas, naming and decorating them, for example. Angle recalled an incident when a soldier plucked a banged-up military robot nicknamed Scooby from an Iraqi battlefield and carried it to a depot to be fixed.

"It's doing you a service, you're going to get attached to it," Angle said.

Ronald Arkin teaches a course on robots and society at Georgia Tech and directs the school's Mobile Robot Laboratory. His most recent book is titled "Governing Lethal Behavior in Autonomous Robots."

"There needs to be ethics embedded in the systems," he said. "It's not just making a system that assists someone. It's making a system that interacts with someone in a way that respects their dignity."

Horvitz said his panel will recommend more research into the psychological reactions humans have to robotic systems. The group, he said, also suggests machines be designed with the ability to explain their reasoning to humans.

While ethicists, lawyers and roboticists ponder how to best integrate humans and autonomous machines, there is some evidence that a balance is already beginning to be struck.

After returning to the Stanford hospital on another occasion, Horvitz noticed a sign hanging above the spot where he had his harrowing experience. It read: "Please Do Not Board The Elevator With The Robot."

Toymaker: Zhu Zhu Pets OK

The Washington Post

The manufacturer of this holiday season's runaway hit toy, Zhu Zhu Pets, made public its independent laboratory tests showing that the furry electronic hamster does not exceed federal limits for any toxic chemicals.

The disclosure came after a Web site, the Good Guide, said Friday it had found high levels of antimony in the Zhu Zhu Pets' "Mr. Squiggles" model. Antimony is used as a fire retardant in textiles and plastics, and chronic exposure can cause heart and lung problems and other health effects.

Federal laws require that toys contain no more antimony than 60 parts per million. The Good Guide reported it had tested Mr. Squiggles and detected antimony at levels ranging from 90 parts per million to 103 parts per million.

But the Web site used a relatively inexpensive X-ray device to test the toy, instead of performing more extensive solubility tests required by the federal government.

Cepia LLC, the St. Louis-based manufacturer of Zhu Zhu Pets, took the unusual step of posting its internal test results — provided by Bureau Veritas Consumer Products Services, a well-known independent laboratory — that showed the toys did not exceed federal limits of toxic chemicals in solubility tests and other analyses.

Webster to head Hood probe

By DEVLIN BARRETT

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Ex-FBI director William Webster will conduct an independent review of the bureau's handling of information gathered about the Fort Hood shooting suspect before the deadly rampage, officials said Tuesday.

FBI Director Robert Mueller has asked Webster to take a look at how the bureau handled information about Maj. Nidal Malik Hasan in the months before the shooting that killed 13 people at the Texas military base.

Mueller had already ordered an internal review of the matter, and that review led to a secret report to the White House in late November. The new assignment for Webster takes the internal review a step further, and likely means a more prolonged, in-depth inquiry. Webster is a former judge who also served as CIA director.

In a statement, Mueller called Webster "uniquely qualified" for the job because he "has led independent reviews of various FBI systems and broader policies and provided valuable recommendations. In this case, Judge Webster will have complete access and whatever resources necessary to complete the task."

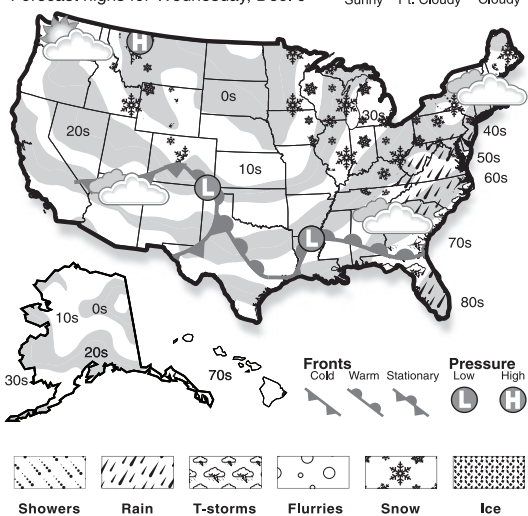

The U.S. military is also reviewing its handling of information about Hasan before the shooting spree, and has sent a report to the White House on the matter. In the FBI's case, members of two anti-terrorism task forces saw e-mails between the Army psychiatrist and a radical imam overseas beginning in December 2008.

One of those task forces reviewed the communications and decided they were in keeping with Hasan's research at the time. As a result, no formal investigation of Hasan was opened — a move that has been criticized by some in Congress.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR/OPINION

God acted on world's evils

The writer of "Part of God's plan?" (letter, Dec. 3) has a false argument. He starts with three false presuppositions.

The first is, God should be the way the writer wants him to be. Second, he presupposes that human beings are truly good. No one on Earth can say he has kept the Ten Commandments perfectly. We are sinners by nature and are born in rebellion against God. If God is just, he must punish sinners. God owes us nothing else. The third false presupposition is that God has done nothing about this problem of evil.

God, in his love and mercy, was not content to leave us in this hopeless condition. God became a man to live a perfect life in our place and die the death we all deserve (for our sin) in our place, and rose from the dead to prove it. He died for all of our (me included) blasphemy, adultery, lying, stealing, disobedience to parents, covetousness, idolatry, murder (hate anyone lately?), Sabbath-breaking and atheism. God the Father poured out all of his wrath on his own son that he might adopt us wretched sinners for his own. By grace through faith in Jesus Christ, God imputes the righteousness of Christ to the believer and Christ takes the sins of the world. Christ has propitiated God's wrath and he calls us to repent and believe this good news.

Yes, it's God's plan. Romans 9:20: "Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?"

Ideas that hurt U.S.

"Effects of religion's decline" (letter, Dec. 4) illustrates some of the serious intellectual roadblocks damaging our nation and discouraging the vital preservation of liberty, indispensable in maintaining the country we love and serve.

The letter says "Don't whine to me about freedom of choice," a disconcerting sentence that unfortunately reflects an opinion shared by many Americans. As soldiers, sailors and Marines, we swore an oath to protect the Constitution. This magnificent document was created by extraordinary "whiners," who had the audacity to believe that people should be able to make their own decisions.

The letter asks if "anyone" can "say there is a direct correlation between the ... rise of social problems and the decline of religion?" It is a common fallacy to believe that now is the worst that society has ever been. Our falling crime rates and improved racial relations are two bits of mounting evidence suggesting that things are actually getting better.

The author also states that monogamy is an idea that "Christianity has been teaching for the past 2,000-plus years." [Some might say that] the Bible doesn't endorse monogamy, but it does mention polygamy often. It is common for Christians to believe their morals originate from the Bible, but most derive from the same sources as nonbelievers, via societal norms and empathy. For example, rape and slavery are mentioned in the Bible, but Christians and atheists today can agree these ideas are deplorable.

It is likely that the decline in religious thinking will continue to benefit the world. Those of us who have deployed have seen firsthand the damage possible when the populace adheres to religious mandates that are intolerant of freedoms and ignore common sense and empathy.

No good food options

I'm a disabled [Army] veteran and a civilian contractor serving in Afghanistan.

I've noticed a lot of soldiers who can't possibly meet height and weight standards. I still hit the gym regularly, despite my physical limitations. Yet, I appear to be in far greater shape than most soldiers.

I just left a dining facility and here is what I saw: The mainline food, which is usually the same starchy foods served a different way every meal, is OK if you're diligent, choose healthy foods, use the salad bar and/or eat fruit. But the additional stuff ...

I mentally inventoried: three kinds of doughnuts (Is that a jelly doughnut, Private Pyle?), four kinds of cake, five flavors of ice cream and all toppings, three kinds of pie, three kinds of muffins, sugary cereals, five types of cookies, two kinds of Pop-Tarts, every drink in the cooler besides water and milk has sugar, three kinds of chips, four types of hot dessert like cobbblers, on top of the prepackaged stuff. ... I think I gained five pounds just having typed all that!

This food is in direct conflict with what we preach and teach. It's like telling children "Don't smoke!" while you puff away, or urging them "Don't do drugs!" while you're stoned. We've been "forcing" our soldiers into physical training since they joined, but we've never "forced" them to eat right. Yes, soldiers are adults and can eat what they wish, but this isn't helping matters. The chow halls are filled with unhealthy food and next-to-no good-options, besides a few types of fruit.

You can't "insist" unless you "assist" in any task. This situation is akin to someone serving cocktails at an Alcoholics Anonymous meeting.

Mayors push to keep guns from terrorists

Washington Post editorial

Mayors Against Illegal Guns, a bipartisan coalition of roughly 500 U.S. mayors, has been pushing for smart and sensible law enforcement solutions to reduce the number of illegal guns obtained by criminals or would-be criminals. Last month, the mayors renewed their call for adoption of two ... potentially powerful proposals.

The first aims to close the "terror gap" in existing gun laws by prohibiting anyone on the country's "no fly" list from being allowed to purchase a gun. Such a prohibition would allow the FBI to stop "people who are too dangerous to get on a plane from buying guns and explosives," said New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg. ... This proposal is a no-brainer.

A 2009 report by the General Accountability Office found 865 instances between 2004 and February 2009 where those on the terrorist watch list were able to buy a gun. The law currently bars convicted felons and illegal immigrants ... among others, from purchasing guns, but no mention is made of a suspected terrorist. Legislation to close this loophole, introduced by Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., and Rep. Carolyn McCarthy, D-N.Y., has stalled.

The mayors are also arguing for elimination of a provision that forces the FBI to destroy within 24 hours any record of a background check performed on someone who passes the screening. The provision is part of the Tiahrt Amendment. ... Before the Tiahrt Amendment was passed, the FBI would routinely keep records of background checks on file for six months. Had this remained the practice, law enforcement agents who were tracking the activities of Maj. Nidal Malik Hasan, the alleged gunman in the Fort Hood, Texas, massacre, would have had the opportunity to see that he had purchased a weapon in August.

No one will ever know if knowledge of that purchase ... could have thwarted the Fort Hood attack. There should be no doubt, however, about the need for law enforcement officials to have access to this information.

OPINION

More power perhaps not best in Afghan war

By JOHN M. CRISP

Scripps Howard News Service

At times during [President Barack Obama's] Dec. 1 speech on Afghanistan, my innate skepticism about the possibility of a military solution was challenged by his eloquent reminder that the dreadful events of 9/11 emanated from that part of the world.

... Still, something doesn't feel quite right. General Stanley McChrystal, the commander in Afghanistan, says that 40,000 troops will be necessary to bring the situation under control. On the other hand, Karl Eikenberry, a former general and current ambassador to Afghanistan, says that more troops will make things worse. So one general says 30,000 additional troops are too few; another says they're way too many. ...

The fact that our European allies have little enthusiasm for this war is disquieting, as well. The President hopes that they will pony up another 5,000 or 10,000 troops. But that low number seems like a half-hearted token, and it's clear that the burden of the fighting will still fall on our troops.

Our allies' lack of enthusiasm merely reflects our own. For some time polls have shown less than wholehearted support among Americans for our uncertain presence in Afghanistan.

Unfortunately, wars that are more like football games are easier to understand and to support: A good war should have an obvious enemy, preferably in uniform, as well as territory that can be captured and controlled while on the way to a goal that's visible and not too distant.

Vietnam and Iraq, after the initial phase, had none of these characteristics, and public support was difficult to maintain. Afghanistan presents the same problem. The President understands this, and he wisely set a goal in the near-distance, saying essentially, let's try it for eighteen months, and if it doesn't work we'll begin removing troops.

But here's the most disturbing element of all: Every Sunday the political talk show "This Week" announces the names, ages, and hometowns of the soldiers and Marines killed during the previous week in Iraq and Afghanistan. After a bad week, the toll might be 20, other weeks, 10. Some weeks, only five soldiers die.

Unfortunately, this ghastly math continues ... month after month, regardless of whether the Afghan government becomes less or more corrupt ...

The problem is that even at the very conservative rate of, say, seven deaths per week, almost before you know it, eighteen months have passed and more than 500 Americans will be dead. And who knows how many Afghans will die?

If all this death prevents another Sept. 11, perhaps it's worth it. But many believe that ramping up troop levels in Afghanistan will make terrorist attacks more likely ...

Afghanistan puts the President into an extremely difficult position. From what we know about Barack Obama, his deliberations were exhaustive. Nevertheless, we're winding up doing what we usually do: applying the remedy that we understand best and have the most of, hard military power.

Unfortunately Afghanistan presents no good choices. But the lack of an alternative better than military power doesn't preclude us from opposing an action that is certain to be very costly in blood and doubtful in its effectiveness.

You don't have to be a military genius to see that raw power doesn't have an encouraging record in this kind of war, in this part of the world. Isn't it time to try something else?

For success in Afghanistan, look back to war's start

By DOUG STANTON

In mid-October and early November 2001, about three dozen Army Special Forces soldiers landed in northern Afghanistan and, with the help of a handful of CIA officers, quickly routed a Taliban army whose estimated size ranged from 25,000 to 50,000 fighters. Allied with Afghan fighters, this incredibly small number of first-in soldiers achieved in about eight weeks what the Pentagon had thought would take two years. For the first time in U.S. history, Army Special Forces were deployed as the lead element in a war.

And then, just as quickly, the Americans went home, pulled away to fight in Iraq in 2003. The Taliban soldiers filled the emerging power vacuum, and you pretty much know the rest of the story: Gen. Stanley McChrystal's dire August report on deteriorating conditions in Afghanistan, and President Obama's speech Tuesday announcing an influx of 30,000 additional American troops ...

Obama's stated purposes — to disrupt, dismantle and ultimately defeat al-Qaida, and to train an Afghan army and police force capable of providing for the nation's security — are sensible and even noble. Accomplishing them will go a ways toward creating a more stable country. But his new strategy is not enough, and it may prove a mistaken effort to replicate an Iraq-like approach ...

All the "graveyard of empires" metaphors aside, it's no secret that Afghans excel at repelling occupiers, and dropping 30,000 new troops into the country is a sure way of being perceived as an occupying force. Instead, Obama could steal a page from the original approach to the Afghan war — the Special Forces approach, ... which recognizes, as one Special Forces major explained to me, that an insurgency is a social problem, like teen pregnancy or drug abuse. The solutions evolve (if they do at all) over generations, not in months or in a few years.

The debate over what to do in Afghanistan, then, is really a debate about locating the ... people, places and power brokers who must be influenced to make social change.

When I tuned in to Obama's speech, I was hoping for a plan that did not solely resemble a conventional counterinsurgency strategy, like McChrystal's, with its traditional aims to "clear, hold and build" ground and undertake the complicated task of nation-building. While this strategy has worked in degrees in Iraq, it was preceded by a more nuanced, complex strategy of working with and through local Iraqis, principally in Anbar province. There, men such as retired Army Special Forces Master Sgt. Andy Marchal, who had fought in Afghanistan in 2001 with the first team to enter the country, instigated social change and tamped down violence by creating jobs and working with tribesmen who had decided to stop fighting alongside al-Qaida. ...

This model works tribe by tribe and village by village. It considers violence, unemployment and unrest as part of the same cloth. Special Forces soldiers may arm and train militias to defend themselves, as well as help build water systems and provide jobs and medical care. It can be slower, nuanced work, and it relies on building rapport with citizens, which is why Special Forces soldiers receive language training and believe awareness of local customs and mores is critical. ...

This model can be far less bloody and far less costly than deploying tens of thousands of conventional Army troops, and there are signs that a "tribal-centric" approach is gaining traction with some strategists. One signal is the buzz created by an informal paper called "Tribe by Tribe," by Special Forces Maj. Jim Gant. "When we gain the respect of one tribe," Gant writes, "there will be a domino effect throughout the region and beyond. One tribe will eventually become 25 or even 50 tribes."

Another encouraging sign is a dynamic new effort called the Community Defense Initiative. Afghan citizens and militias not sympathetic to the Taliban are receiving assistance from teams of Special Forces soldiers to defend their villages from Taliban attack. The initiative resembles what Special Forces soldiers did during the fighting in 2001, when they united various ethnic groups and fought together against the Taliban. ...

One advantage to this approach is that it does not rely on a weak and so-far ineffectual government in Kabul for support, which, a defense official said, would be like "hitching our wagon to a crippled horse."

It's not too late to consider wider adoption of the tribal approach. ... The debate about what to do in Afghanistan has often seemed a simple, binary discussion: all in, or all out. ... One better answer is to revisit the lessons from the Special Forces campaign immediately after Sept. 11, 2001. This may not be easy. Within the military, there is resistance to this kind of warfare. The conventional Army, one Special Forces officer told me, was uncomfortable with the decentralized nature of the war effort in 2001 and with how cheap it was.

He recounted how he was once stopped by a senior officer from the conventional Army who told him, "You must be proud of what you did in Afghanistan." The Special Forces officer said he was. "Good," replied the other, "because you'll never get the chance to do it again."

Governor sent callers to sex line

FL TALLAHASSEE — Oops! In an embarrassing blunder, Gov. Charlie Crist mistakenly directed parents of uninsured children to call a toll-free sex line after two numbers were transposed.

Anyone calling the number Crist gave out was told to call another number.

The recording on that second phone number begins, "Hey there sexy guys" and says the caller can have a more graphic conversation with a woman for $2.99 a minute.

The Palm Beach Post discovered the mistake. Crist quickly fixed it.

Bacterial disease brucellosis found in cow

ID BOISE — The infectious bacterial disease brucellosis has been found in a beef cow in eastern Idaho, and state agriculture officials are scrambling to see if the infection is isolated or if it has spread to other herds.

Idaho Department of Agriculture state veterinarian Bill Barton sent a memo saying that a beef cow from a newly assembled 600-head herd tested positive for the disease, which is rarely transmitted to humans but can cause spontaneous abortions and other problems in cattle, elk, bison and other mammals.

No calves or bred females have been sold from the herd, according to Barton's memo.

Winter's here, yet corn harvest drags on

IL CHAMPAIGN — Harvest season in the country's No. 2 corn-producing state is dragging on for weeks longer than usual.

The country's corn harvest season — expected to be the second largest U.S. crop ever — is finally winding down in most states. But not Illinois.

Across much of the Corn Belt, a wet spring kept farmers from planting on time or in some cases forced them to replant washed-out crops. The season was followed by a cool, damp summer that slowed crop development.

Police probe fake radio call reporting shooting

WA PORT ANGELES — An investigation is under way after someone broadcast a false report of an "officer-involved shooting" over a police radio frequency in the northwestern Washington city of Port Angeles.

The Peninsula Daily News reports that the phony broadcast from an unknown source said the shooting occurred at a city restaurant.

Officers from the Port Angeles Police Department and three other agencies converged on the restaurant with guns drawn, but found no crime had been committed.

Domestic abuse victims featured in calendar

TX HOUSTON — A 2010 calendar is meant to serve as a Texas memorial to 12 young women whose deaths have been blamed on abusive partners.

Olga Rodriguez of Houston founded a nonprofit group and created the calendar in memory of her 18-year-old niece, Daniela Huertas.

The pregnant victim was slain in 2007 by her husband, who then killed himself.

Rodriguez hopes the $20 calendar will make young women steer clear of unhealthy relationships.

Dallas County Sheriff's Department spokeswoman Kim Leach originally said investigators believed that robbers fled with Hammett's wallet and some cash.

KTVT-TV reports investigators say the evidence did not add up and Hammett allegedly confessed. He could not immediately be reached for further comment.

Sunnyvale is about 15 miles east of Dallas.

Crowds drawn to islands to catch big waves

HI HONOLULU — The prospect of seeing waves as high as 50 feet drew hundreds of people to Oahu's North Shore. There was only one report of sand and debris washing onto a roadway. There were no reports of structural damage caused by the surf. The National Weather Service forecast the highest waves to hit outer reefs. Waves reaching 30 to 40 feet were expected to pound Kauai, Molokai and Maui, as well as Oahu. The islands remained under a high surf warning, as did the Big Island. On Oahu, officials opened three emergency shelters. But only six people stayed in one of them. The high waves were expected to continue for a couple of days.

Man has beef with cows damaging his house

TN ROGERSVILLE — A Tennessee man's homeowners insurance apparently doesn't cover "acts of cow." Jerry Lynn Davis called the Hawkins County Sheriff's office, complaining that a neighbor's cows had been licking his house. In the process, Davis says the curious bovines did about $100 in damage by ripping off a screen window, cracking the glass and pulling down a gutter. The Kingsport Times-News reports that Davis' home is just a couple of feet from a fence enclosing the cows' pasture. They managed to poke their heads through to lick the house, though a deputy's report did not indicate what made the house so tasty. Deputy Chris Funk was able to contact the cows' owner, who said he'd take care of the problem.

Pointe Vista at Lake Texoma will be a master-planned residential lake community featuring a variety of small to large lakefront properties and luxury resort amenities, including a conference center, hotel, golf courses, and a marina. The $750 million project is expected to cover 3,000 acres.

Ranchers gearing up for fight over water rights

MT BILLINGS — Agricultural interests and residential subdivisions across the arid West are vying for control of water supplies that have emerged as one of the region's most coveted natural resources. In one of the latest skirmishes, five Montana ranch owners filed a petition asking the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation to stop giving away water use rights for tens of thousands of new homes being built in areas once dominated by agriculture. The ranchers' petition charges that the state's water rules are stacked against them.

The rules allow small wells used by each house within larger subdivisions to qualify for exemptions from state water laws. Those laws otherwise give precedence to the "senior" rights of farms and ranches. Rancher Polly Rex characterized the exemption as a loophole that ultimately could rob her of the means to grow hay and water her livestock. Rex said a subdivision of more than 60 homes going up next to her Absarokee ranch could eventually draw down the natural springs she uses on an adjacent 1,250-acre field. "I just really don't think I should change how I do our business because of somebody else," said Rex, whose water rights date to the late 1800s.

Police officer killed while awaiting backup

PA PENN HILLS — A suburban Pittsburgh police officer awaiting backup was fatally shot in his parked patrol car by a man who emerged from a home moments after killing someone over a $500 drug debt, police said. Penn Hills police Officer Michael Crawshaw, 32, was the first to respond to a 911 call. Crawshaw was advised to wait in his patrol car because of past problems reported at the home and because dispatchers heard shots over the phone, Penn Hills Chief Howard Burton said. Ronald Robinson, 31, was charged with burglary and two counts of homicide, Moffatt said. Crawshaw was taken to UPMC Presbyterian Hospital, where he was pronounced dead shortly before 9 p.m.

Water agency predicts glum year amid drought

CA FRESNO — California officials expect to release a record-low amount of water to 25 million residents next year if the drought continues, a grim outlook for local farmers and urban dwellers already struggling to conserve after three years of persistent dry weather. Lester Snow, who directs the state Department of Water Resources, said the agency anticipates delivering just 5 percent of what was requested by its contractors — the lowest projection in history. While water deliveries could increase if more rain and snow falls over the winter months — a likely possibility if El Nino weather patterns hit California — Snow said the state had to assume it would be faced with a fourth year of drought.

New bidding program could save county money

HI HILO — Hawaii County officials say more competitive bid specifications for roadside work could end up saving county taxpayers more than $1 million over the next two years. Officials say Kamaaina Pumping, which has held a contract for roadside drywell and culvert cleaning since 1996, was the apparent low bidder on the two-year contract. The company bid about half what it charged for the previous two years, when it billed the county $2.5 million for the same work.

HI THERE! WE ARE A COLONY OF FREE-SPIRITED PENGUINS!

WE CELEBRATE YOU TOO, NO MATTER HOW DIFFERENT YOU MAY BE! RIGHT.

THAT'S GREAT! UM... GUESS I'M KINDA WHAT YOU'D CALL AN AVERAGE CONFORMIST THOUGH.

Apparently, I left my keys in the parking lot of the bank today on my lunch. A woman who saw me looking for them inside the Yujo said she saw them in the parking lot. I got there hoping to find them on the ground, but no luck. Panicking (because that car key is the only one that came with the car) I was headed to the security shack to see if anyone had turned them in. For some reason I looked in my car and there they were, on the passenger seat. If you are the person who found them, please drop me an email at vettechic@yahoo.com or call 512-275-4895. I have something for you. Thank you so much. Tammy Lynn

Report: Fla. trooper sought Woods' blood results

By MIKE SCHNEIDER
The Associated Press

WINDERMERE, Fla. — A Florida trooper who suspected Tiger Woods was driving under the influence sought a subpoena for the golfer's blood results from the hospital he was taken to after crashing his SUV, but prosecutors rejected the petition for insufficient information, according to a police report released Monday.

A witness, who wasn't identified in the report, told trooper Joshua Evans that Woods had been drinking alcohol earlier. The same witness also said Woods had been prescribed two drugs, Ambien and Vicodin.

The report did not say who the witness was but added it was the same person who pulled Woods from the vehicle after the accident outside his home. Woods' wife, Elin, has told police that she used a golf club to smash the back windows of the Cadillac Escalade to help her husband out.

"Impairment of the driver is also suspected due to the careless driving that resulted in the traffic crash," Evans wrote in the report dated Nov. 30 that was released by the State Attorney General's office.

Woods' attorney, Mark Ne-Jame, didn't return a phone call for comment.

The world's No. 1 golfer hit a hydrant and a tree around 2:25 a.m. on Nov. 27. The Florida Highway Patrol last week cited Woods for careless driving and fined him $164.

Another police report offered new details into the accident from the officer who first responded to the 911 call.

Woods was at first unresponsive, lying on the road covered in a blanket and resting his head on a pillow, according to the report from the Windermere Police Department. The officer, whose name was redacted from the report, said Woods tried to stand up before the officer told him to lie down for his safety. The officer used the pillow to immobilize the golfer's spine.

Woods was bleeding from cut lips but was breathing normally. His wife, Elin, was kneeling over him.

The sport utility vehicle's engine was still running, the front passenger door was jammed and both rear door windows were broken out. Two golf clubs were next to a golf cart, which also was in the road. The officer found $235 in the vehicle, according to the report, which was obtained through a public records request.

Emergency crews were summoned to Woods' mansion for the second time in less than two weeks Tuesday, this time because his mother-in-law was having stomach pains.

Barbro Holmberg was taken by ambulance to Health Central Hospital after someone called 911 about 2:35 a.m., hospital spokesman Dan Yates said. She was in stable condition later Tuesday and her condition was not serious, but Yates said he could not be more specific because of privacy laws.

Holmberg, who arrived in the U.S. a few days ago, lives in Sweden and is the mother of Woods' wife, Elin.

Health Central is the same hospital where Woods was treated after he crashed his sport utility vehicle.

Yates said Holmberg was in a private room and the family has hired additional security to keep the media away. He said family members have visited, but he would not say which ones.

"She's in a wing that helps protect her privacy," Yates said.

Associated Press Writers Mike Schneider in Orlando, Antonio Gonzalez in Windermere and Louise Nordstrom in Stockholm contributed to this report.

New DODDS-Pacific director willing to listen

By DAVE ORNAUER
Stars and Stripes

FOR years, baseball, softball and track athletes have suffered as their spring soccer counterparts would pack off to Far East tournaments while they sat home during May.

But take heart, says DODDS-Pacific's new director Diana Ohman — the wait could be nearly over.

"There has to be planning time. It doesn't happen overnight," she said. "I think it can be done in a year. By 2010-11, you will see movement toward that, starting yesterday. You will see it come to fruition."

Ohman spoke Friday of making track, softball and baseball part of the Far East Activities Calendar during a wide-ranging interview with Stripes at DODDS-Pacific's headquarters here.

The lifelong educator, who served the past 10 years in the same capacity in Europe, arrived in the Pacific with a reputation as a "sports enthusiast" with "new ideas" that could benefit Far East sports.

"One of the reasons I was willing to come was that I think we can add some things and make them our own and improve the chances and opportunities for young people," she said.

The FEAC schedule as it is now is "not fair and equitable," Ohman said. "There are more sports and academic activities offered in Europe."

Issues such as financing, weather, where the meets can be, how long they last, pitching arms, the two-week Advanced Placement testing period and Japan's Golden Week travel period must be overcome.

"Only one thing on that list was more or different than we faced in Europe and that was Golden Week," she said. "Everything else — the rainy periods, dates for tests — we dealt with and we put those on the map."

One thing that might help is a new procurement system for buying air passage for student-athletes to Far East tournaments. Instead of base airline ticket offices, districts are now buying from local contracted vendors at a "huge" savings, Ohman said.

Just for Far East tournaments in November, the new system resulted in a 51 percent savings from a year ago, or more than $235,000. All of it stays within the activities budget,

DAVE ORNAUER/Stars and Stripes

New DODDS-Pacific director Diana Ohman, who served the past 10 years in the same capacity in Europe, said she is open to adding track, softball and baseball championships to the Far East Activities Calendar. "There has to be planning time. It doesn't happen overnight," she said.

Ohman said.

"We could do all kinds of things," she said. "If we're going to develop new sports and other activities, we'll need equipment, uniforms, whatever we need, we can reinvest" that savings.

Options include adding days to existing events, such as tennis, cross country and wrestling meets — or even readmitting non-DODEA schools to those meets.

"Everything is on the table," Ohman said, adding that if the Far East Activities Council, headed by Don Hobbs, recommends that, "I'll approve it. I'm willing to listen to anything, the pros, cons, expense, the feasibility. ... The door is open to change, absolutely."

Hobbs says reinstating international schools, barred from tennis, cross country and wrestling in 2004, can "always be discussed." "We would have to ensure that host schools have adequate facilities and sufficient billeting," Hobbs said. "If non-DODEA schools are added to the mix, we will have to look closely" at optimum team levels.

Basketball, volleyball and soccer tournaments, to which non-DODEA schools are invited, are "working fine," Hobbs said. "Teams are playing regularly and no team is being asked to play too many games. The question might be, do some of the tournaments have too many teams?"

Whatever the outcome, all those efforts, Ohman said, are being made toward the betterment of activities and students who participate.

"I'm not going to rule out one thing until coaches, athletic directors, principals, superintendents and military leaders have had some input, then some thoughts about organizing, time and expense have to be added in," Ohman said.

She doesn't plan, she says, to "Europize" the Pacific, but "we can add things and call them our own. I'm willing to listen to all options if we think we're doing something that's even better for the kids. What we do today is very good for kids. But we can be even better."

Sports, Ohman said, is what got her through high school and "I just never let go." They teach things that students cannot get in the classroom and are a perfect training ground for life, she said.

"I've seen sportsmanship turn kids around, how they view life, treat people and behave," Ohman said. "That whole business about teamwork and being part of a greater whole is invaluable. And it's up and off the couch, it's out there bouncing around and doing things. That's paramount for kids today."

Game of the week

Boys basketball
Kadena (10-0) at Kubasaki (3-5)
When: 7 p.m. Wednesday
Where: Dragons Den, Kubasaki High School, Camp Foster, Okinawa

What: Fourth of six regular-season meetings between the most decorated boys basketball programs in DODDS-Pacific high school history. The teams have amassed 17 of 60 banners issued since the Far East Class AA Tournament began in 1949. Kubasaki has won nine, its last in 2007, and Kadena eight, most recently in 2005. Kadena won the first regular-season meeting, 68-57 on Nov. 21 at the Okinawa Convention Center, then beat the Dragons 86-66 in the first round of the Hong Kong International School Holiday Basketball Tournament playoffs. The two teams met again on Tuesday at Kadena as this edition went to press.

Players to watch: From the outside, Taiyo Robertson and L.J. Hubbard, and from the inside, Kevin Paranal, Jason Sumpter and Jeremy Howell have been responsible for the Dragons' 10-0 start, the best under coach Robert Bliss' watch. Kentrell Key must man up inside against the inside threesome for the Dragons, while Kai Yamaguchi, DaShawn Johnson and Dionte Watie, among others, must get hot from outside to slow Kadena.

ATHLETES OF THE WEEK

Josh Adair

Basketball, Nile C. Kinnick

Last week: Averaged a double-double as the Red Devils won all three games they played and improved to 6-0, their best start in five years.

Adair, a junior, had 10 points and 10 rebounds as Kinnick held off American School in Japan 77-72 on Wednesday. He then had 12 points and 11 rebounds, including seven in overtime, five at the foul line, in the Devils' 67-63 overtime victory Friday over Robert D. Edgren, and 10 points and 14 rebounds as Kinnick routed Matthew C. Perry 57-33.

"Josh is the kind of kid a coach dreams about: He's intelligent, never quits, can play all five positions and, most importantly, is totally unselfish," his coach and father Mike Adair said. "He could easily get 15 to 20 points a game at guard, but he understands his team lacks the height it's had in past years and plays the forward-center position with a vengeance."

Selected by Stars and Stripes staff.

Liz Gleaves

Basketball, Seoul American

Last week: Averaged double figures in scoring and led the team in assists and steals as the Falcons won three Korean-American Interscholastic Activities Conference games, all on the road, to improve to 4-0.

Gleaves, a junior, had nine points, six steals and four assists in the Falcons' 50-16 victory at Seoul Foreign on Wednesday. In Friday's 56-18 victory at Taejon Christian International, she added 14 points, seven assists and seven steals, then 18 points, eight steals and eight assists in Saturday's 56-25 victory at Daegu American.

"The sky is the limit for her," coach Billy Ratcliff said. "She's tremendous. Incredible athleticism. Having a year in my system, she's used to what I'm expecting, the role I want her to play. She's so unselfish. She could score more, but she sees herself as a playmaker."

New Jersey goalie Martin Brodeur, right, stops a shot by Buffalo's Adam Mair during the third period of Monday's game in Buffalo, N.Y. Brodeur earned his 103rd career shutout in the Devils' 3-0 victory.

NHL roundup

Devils' Brodeur ties mark for shutouts with No. 103

Shares record with Sawchuk

The Associated Press

BUFFALO, N.Y. — Although Jacques Lemaire gave Martin Brodeur his shot in 1993, he's not taking any credit for the goalie's success.

"Me? I'm doing nothing," the New Jersey coach said after Brodeur tied Terry Sawchuk's NHL record with his 103rd shutout, leading the Devils to a 3-0 victory over the Buffalo Sabres on Monday night. "He's the one stopping the puck."

Twenty-two pucks to be exact against the Sabres, enough to tie the shutout mark that Sawchuk set while playing from 1949-70.

"It's been a lot of years, and that's what kind of catches my eye more than anything," Brodeur said. "So it's kind of surreal because (Sawchuk's) not there to see it."

Brodeur was rarely tested in earning his second shutout of the season after he blanked Carolina on Oct. 17.

"It's a big number," he said after taking pictures with the historic puck in front of a piece of paper with the number "103" taped behind his locker stall. "When I look back, and all the numbers of other goalies, it's mind-boggling a little bit. It's a little bit like what the win record was. But, especially with hockey changing so much, it's going to get harder and harder to get some."

Brodeur is the only active goalie on the Top 22 career shutout list. Detroit's Chris Osgood is the next active goalie behind Brodeur with 50 shutouts, good for 23rd.

"You'd have to have a crystal ball to guess what he's been able to accomplish," said New Jersey GM Lou Lamoriello, who drafted Brodeur with the 20th overall pick in 1990. "I don't think you ever think like that."

The NHL's winningest goalie with 575 victories, Brodeur earned his league-leading 18th of the season. He preserved the shutout with a lightning-quick glove stop on Buffalo defenseman Steve Montador's wrist shot from the slot 5 minutes into the third period.

"I kind of waved at it, and it hit the top of my glove," Brodeur said. "I got kind of lucky that it stayed in front of me."

Capitals 3, Lightning 0: Alex Ovechkin scored two goals in his return from a two-game suspension and visiting Washington beat the Tampa Bay for the 12th consecutive time.

Maple Leafs 5, Thrashers 2: Vesa Toskala made 22 saves in his first start since Nov. 23 and Alexei Ponikarovsky scored goals 28 seconds apart for Toronto.

Canadiens 3, Flyers 1: Mike Cammalleri notched his team-leading 16th goal after Andrei Kostitsyn scored on host Montreal's third shot of the game in the second period.

Avalanche 4, Blues 0: Peter Budaj stopped 35 shots, Chris Stewart had two goals and an assist and Colorado ended a five-

Emotional Iverson loses in return to Philly

BY DAN GELSTON
The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Allen Iverson felt the love as soon as he parked at the Wachovia Center.

He waved to the fans who waited outside in the Philadelphia cold to greet him, and turned a routine pregame warmup into a scene straight out of a red carpet arrival.

Fans lined the court to take snapshots of a picture they thought they might never see again — Iverson in a No. 3 jersey getting ready to play for the Philadelphia 76ers.

Iverson was in his basketball home Monday night and Philly's first sellout crowd of the season roared to let him know how much they appreciated having the one-time franchise great back on their side.

"That was the best part of the night, just hearing these people's voices all over again," Iverson said.

If his homecoming had a familiar emotional tug for Iverson, so did the losing.

Iverson scored 11 points on 4-for-11 shooting and had six assists in Philadelphia's 10th straight loss, 93-83 to Denver on Monday night. The Sixers were on an 11-game losing streak the day Iverson was traded in 2006.

"I had chill-bumps running all through my body the whole game," Iverson said. "It just felt good to be back."

Yes, the A.I. Show played again in Philly. And the early returns have 76ers fans in love with the revival as much as the original.

"I just felt like I was back home," Iverson said. "It was déjà vu. Just a real good feeling. The fans made it hard on me because they made me more nervous than I already was."

Iverson was edited out of highlights and banished from the team in the week leading up to his acrimonious 2006 trade to Denver. But he got his own greatest hits montage on Monday and a sellout crowd of 20,664 never stopped cheering him on.

Iverson received a standing ovation when he left in the fourth quarter.

Chanuncey Billups scored 31 points and Carmelo Anthony 14. The Nuggets went on a 22-3 run in the fourth quarter to rally for their fourth straight victory.

Iverson was introduced fourth, bowed and kissed the logo at midcourt, then joined his teammates for a little dance. Iverson gave a friendly point to former coach George Karl and hugged ex-teammate Anthony.

Iverson played 38 minutes but has some concerns about playing in game condition. Iverson always dreamed of a return to the team he led to the 2001 NBA Finals.

"In your dreams, you always hope for the best," he said. "That's what I'm doing. I love these people here. They know that.

They love me back. Hopefully, it'll just be a great experience."

Jazz end series drought vs. Spurs

The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — After missing his first six shots, Deron Williams had more than half the game to regain his confidence.

It didn't take that long.

Williams recovered from his early shooting slump with 15 of his 17 points in the second half, including a go-ahead jumper with 22 seconds left, and the Utah Jazz held on for a 104-101 victory over the San Antonio Spurs on Monday.

Williams made eight of his last 10 shots and also had 11 assists while leading the Jazz to their third straight victory over the Spurs.

For the first time since 1997-98, Utah will claim the season series against San Antonio.

"It feels good. This is a team that's pretty much dominated us since I've been here and probably a little bit before that," Williams said.

It was a great way for the Jazz to start one of the most difficult weeks of the season. The Jazz visit the Lakers on Wednesday, are back at home against Orlando on Thursday, and then host the Lakers on Saturday.

Carlos Boozer had 27 points, seven rebounds and five assists, and Ronnie Brewer had 17 points and 10 rebounds for Utah, which outscored the Spurs 37-19 in the third quarter and held on.

Both teams blew big leads and had chances to win it at the end before Utah finally clinched it on Mehmet Okur's two foul shots with 1.5 seconds to go.

"I'm really excited for our players. I don't get that excited very often," Utah coach Jerry Sloan said. "I was excited for them tonight because I think they really needed that to try to move forward with the way we've been trying to play."

Matt Bonner scored a career-high 28 for the Spurs, but he missed on a drive to the basket with 1.9 seconds left and San Antonio down by a point.

Tim Duncan had 23 points and 11 rebounds for the Spurs, who have lost three in a row.

Knicks 93, Trail Blazers 84: Larry Hughes scored 21 points, David Lee had 17 points and 10 rebounds, and host New York won its season-high third straight.

Danilo Gallinari and Wilson Chandler each added 14 points as the Knicks won for the fourth time in five games.

Brandon Roy scored 27 points, and LaMarcus Aldridge had 19 points and 13 rebounds for injury-depleted Portland, which lost center Greg Oden to season-ending surgery Sunday.

Thunder 104, Warriors 88: Kevin Durant scored 28 points, rookie James Harden added a career-high 26 and Oklahoma City capitalized on the ejection of Golden State's Corey Maggette.

The host Thunder led by one when Maggette drew two technical fouls for arguing with official Derek Richardson late in the third quarter. Between Maggette's ejection and the end of the third quarter, the Thunder outscored Golden State 16-5.

Freshmen set pace for No. 2 Texas

The Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas — Texas found some of that missing offense, with a pack of freshmen leading the way.

Avery Bradley scored 17 points and Jordan Hamilton and J'Covan Brown each scored 13 as the No. 2 Longhorns routed Long Beach State 107-74 on Monday night.

"We get better every single day," Bradley said of Texas' group of freshmen, considered by many to be the best in the country. "I think tonight it showed that we're improving every single day."

After two games filled with offensive struggles, Texas (7-0) scored its most points in five seasons, shot 59 percent and had 33 points off 23 turnovers by Long Beach State. Texas also had 23 assists against 11 turnovers. Point guard Dogus Balbay, making just his second start of the season, directed the offense with a career-high 11 assists.

Texas got its best production of the season from the freshmen, most notably from Bradley, who was 7-for-13 shooting with two three-pointers, two assists and two steals. Hamilton was 6-for-12 from the field.

No. 12 Michigan State 69, Citadel 56: Kalin Lucas had 17 points and Michigan State understood the Citadel's strong shooting from three-point range.

The visiting Spartans (7-2) didn't count on the long-range threat. The Bulldogs (6-5) made their first seven three-point attempts and finished 12-for-20.

No. 16 Texas A&M 75, North Texas 65: Donald Sloan scored 21 points to lead four Aggies (8-1) in double figures.

Army 61, Fairleigh Dickinson 40: Julian Simmons scored 17 points to lead visiting Army.

Cleveland Richard added 12 points for the Black Knights (6-2).
